

C Student Doesn't Even see it Coming

(Boulder, CO)- With commencement only a few months away University of Colorado senior Beau Bell doesn't realize he is on the brink of complete independence. Oblivious to the amount of responsibility the situation calls for the 22 year old has no way of avoiding the inevitable pain and frustration that assimilating to the working world brings.

When asked about career possibilities Beau stated "I have sent a few feelers out there, but so far nothing has come back." Jennifer Standly, a recruiter from Jobbound.com, reviewed Beau's resume "This resume tells me that this applicant could be one the most apathetic dimwits to ever apply for a job outside of the food service industry." Adding "During his four years of university his most prestigious accolade is an M.I.P. from the Boulder police department." Citing a below average G.P.A. of 2.0, minimal community involvement, and irrelevant ramblings on Facebook and Twitter as sufficient evidence to predict his rejection from all respectable entry level positions.

Beau remains optimistic "It's all about who you know, not what you know!" failing to comprehend that nepotism is not a reliable career starter and that all the partying he has done has rendered him completely unprepared and inadequate to enter the workforce. "I am a must have for any office, I am proficient in Microsoft Office as well as Adobe Creative Suite. I also have loads of personal experience on social media sites like Facebook and Twitter." The naïve soon-to-be graduate boasted while sending a tweet.

Beau may still be riding the high of barely earning a B.A. in Psychology to realize that checks from mom and dad stop coming as soon as he slides across that stage. "I have my place here until August, then I'm just going move to where my highest paying job offer comes from! If that offer does come, I will get a job at smelly deli on the hill to support myself." Proving that the boy has not taken the time to factor how much money he will need to be a fully function person. When asked about monthly finances Beau wondered, "Well how much could it be, really? Like six--seven hundred, max?"

Experts say that Beau is most likely to shack up in his parent's basement. "If I can't find a job by August, and things get that bad, I guess I could ask if my brother could get me a job" at press time Beau was putting the final touches on a project that was due weeks ago.
